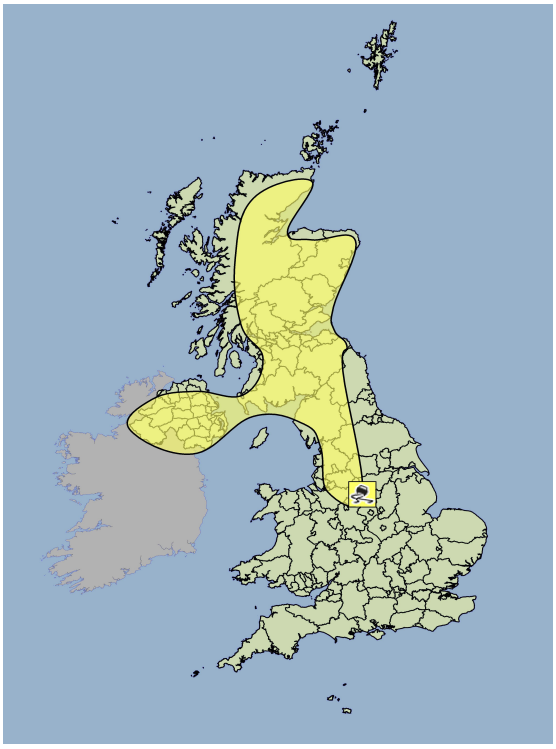
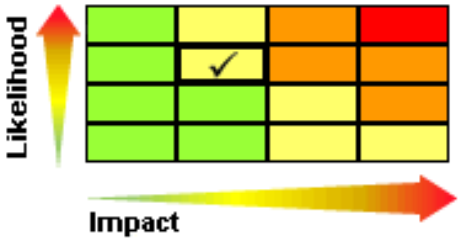
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Fronts will clear southeastwards across the area introducing a cold air mass across the area. Following showers will be wintry over high ground, with settling snow levels ranging from about 200 m NW Scotland to around 300 in NW England and Northern Ireland.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 18:00 on Fri, 23rd Jan 2015 until 10:00 on Sat, 24th Jan 2015

Outbreaks of rain will clear to scattered showers by Friday evening with temperatures then falling quickly allowing icy stretches to develop on untreated surfaces, especially where sheltered from the westerly winds. Showers will become increasingly wintry overnight, some heavy with hail over Scotland and adding to the ice risk but fresh lying snow will be confined to hills.

The public should be aware of the risk of icy stretches on roads and pavements.
